I joined NACADA just over a year ago and have benefited immensely from the events, resources, and professional development opportunities provided by the Association. I had the honor of co-presenting at the 2017 Annual Conference in St. Louis and was grateful for the vast amount of information I gathered from the sessions I attended. I have worked in higher education for five years, beginning my career in undergraduate admissions with subsequent work in scholarship administration, communications, and marketing. During my time in admissions, I earned my Master of Education in Higher Education from the University of Illinois. In my current role, I serve as an academic advisor and am also responsible for departmental recruitment and communications. Although I have only been an academic advisor for a year and a half, I am eager to become more involved in NACADA and give back to an organization that has helped me grow.
