

P13 Infusing Interactive Techniques in your Training, Teaching, and Group Advising

Do you deliver group advising, peer advisor training, faculty or new professional advisor training; or do you teach a freshmen or exploration class? Are you looking for new ways to engage these audiences? Interactive training allows the learner to apply/analyze the material, and increases learner satisfaction and engagement in the process...all of which are desired outcomes. In addition to giving a brief overview of learning theories and teaching concepts, I will give you at least a dozen interactive teaching methods. Each method will include a purpose, relevant example, and written materials for future reference. Since these methods can be used in the delivery of conceptual, relational, and informational material, participants will have the opportunity to explore a variety of applications for their own campus and unique group environments. Not surprisingly, this will be an interactive session as audience participation will reinforce the concepts.