Accountability in Academic Advising:
Data-driven Decision Making to Promote Institutional Change
January 25–26, 2007

Accountability in higher education is a key issue today being driven by state legislatures, regional accrediting bodies, and the public at large. The drive for accountability demands that administrators collect and analyze data for effective decision-making and program development in order to ensure the success of students in their institutions. This seminar will provide participants with:

- strategies for effectively collecting data on their campuses
- information on national surveys and instruments being utilized on campuses
- strategies on the analysis of data for decision-making purposes
- strategies for the effective utilization of data analysis

5th Annual Academic Advising Administrators' Institute

January 28–30, 2007

This institute will provide new and experienced academic advising administrators with the knowledge and skills that are essential in developing, implementing, and overseeing quality advising programs. In addition, participants will have the opportunity to network with other administrators, work with leading experts in the field of advising, and focus on an action plan for a key issue or concern on their campuses.

Tentative Topics:

- Assessment of Advising
- Budget Management/Financial Planning
- Campus Connections/Campus Politics
- Components of Successful Advising Programs
- Assessment, Evaluation, and Reward
- Leadership vs. Management
- Legal and Ethical Issues
- Planning Mission Statements, Goals, and Objectives
- Successful Planning Strategies
- Technology in Advising
- Training and Professional Development
- Utilization of CAS Standards and CORE Values

I felt the conference was one of the most practical conferences I have ever attended. The segmenting into small groups of like institutions with common concerns allowed me to return to campus and immediately implement ideas developed at the conference. I recommend it as a high priority to any advising administrator. Glenn L. Lygrisse, Director of On-Site Advising, Butler Community College-Andover Campus

3rd Annual Assessment of Academic Advising Institute

January 31–February 2, 2007

Assessment of academic advising is essential for a successful and effective academic advising program on any campus. This intensive institute focuses on the components of a successful assessment program as well as provides specific strategies and tools for the development and implementation of assessment programs on your campus.

Tentative Topics:

- Planning for Assessment
- Definitions and Types of Assessment
- Advisor Assessment/Evaluation
- Advising Program Assessment/Evaluation
- Assessment Tools
- Strategies/Techniques of Assessment
- Self-Assessment Using the CAS Standards
- Use of Assessment for Program Improvement
- Developing & Assessing Student Learning Outcomes

The Assessment Institute gave participants the opportunity for genuine collaboration, with other institutions or within their own. We brought a team from Minnesota State – Mankato, and benefited from the synergy that occurred. We continue to work on our campus advising assessment plan that, without conference participation, would not be nearly as comprehensive or developed. Workshop leaders' expertise, tailored levels of instruction, and opportunities to collaborate made this an outstanding institute for anyone interested in doing advising assessment. Sara Granberg-Rademacker, Student Relations Coordinator, College of Arts & Humanities, Minnesota State University, Mankato
