

Interaction with Other Researchers

Both experienced and novice researchers can benefit from interacting with other scholars. And, the NACADA Research and Grant Writing Resources page identifies the following ways to do so:

- Research committee. A group of NACADA members that promotes conditions that advance the body of knowledge within academic advising.
- Research agenda. Critical areas for academic advising research identified by the research committee.
- Research listserv. Stimulates discussion and communication between researchers at all levels of experience.
- Research symposium. Intensive seminar for researchers at all levels of experience who are ready to transform their ideas into scholarly works.
- Doctoral student interest group. Both doctoral students and those interested in working with / advising them.

The Research and Grant Writing Resources page also contains many other resources for researchers.
